

APRIL 16-22, 1996

TWIN CITIES Reader

SPECIAL K

How a daytime-only AM station made Goldy Gopher
a radio hipster

BY JAMES
DIERS
PAGE 10

Big Brother keeps watch over cities'
youth
Page 5

It's My Party:
Coleman woos
"irrelevant"
DFL
Page 7

Great northern railroad? Land-use meeting
leaves crater
Page 8

At Bald Alice
Theatre,
the Shepard is my lord
Page 18

WARD SUTTON

Special K

For two-and-a-half years, U of M students have used AM airwaves to spark their own radio revolution

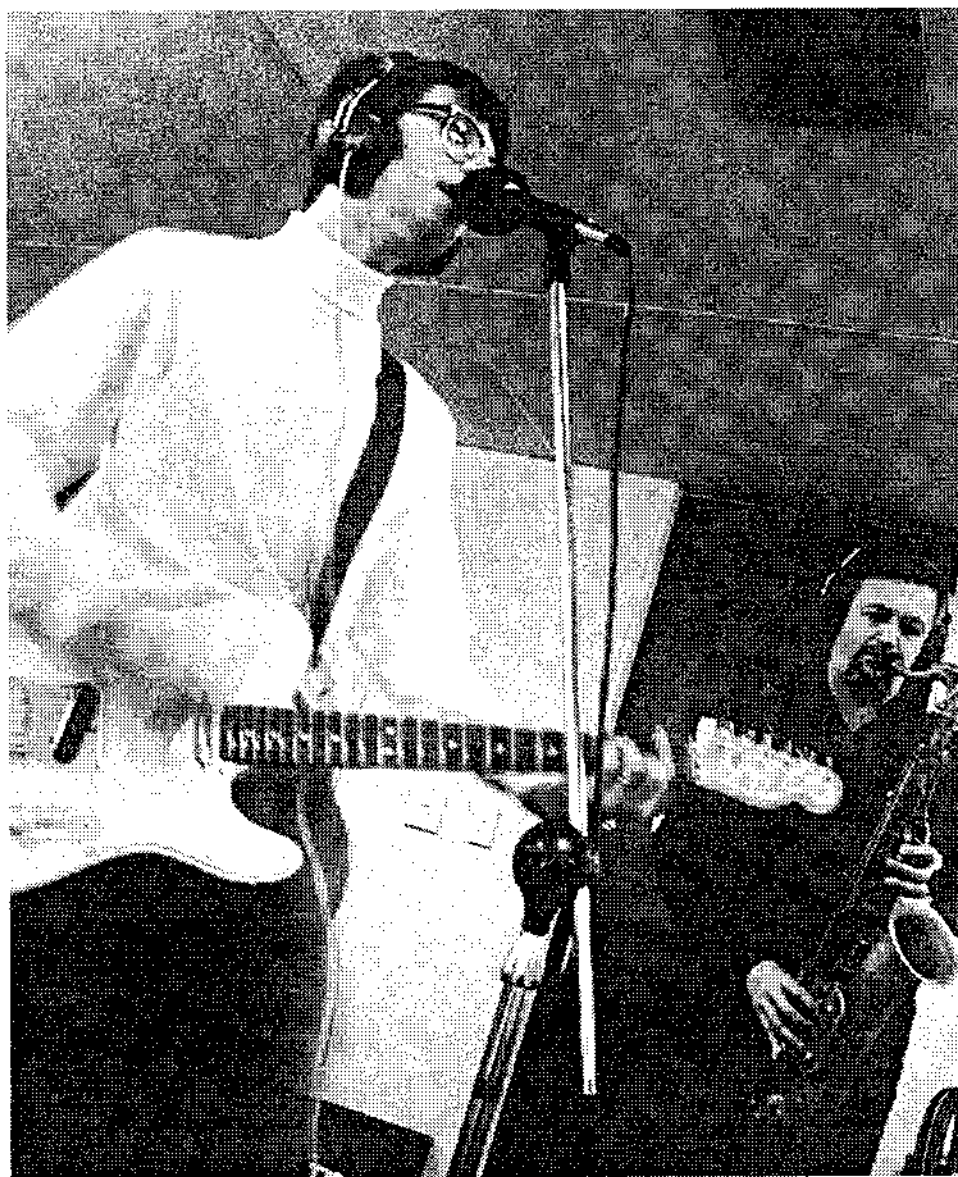

BY JAMES DIERS
PHOTOS BY CRAIG BARES

Rarig Center, on the West Bank in Minneapolis, is typical of the University of Minnesota's grim modern architecture. A gray, monolithic mass of concrete and brick, the building looks more like a correctional facility than a home to some of the university's more creative organizations. A cast of eager, artsy-looking students shuffling about this gloomy fortress is the only real signs that life here is anything beyond, well, institutional. Maybe it's to be expected at a school visited all too frequently by the quandaries of underfunded education.

Make your way up to the fifth and sixth floors, and the world seems brighter. Up here, the cold rock walls are plastered with rock posters. Names and images ranging from Quicksand to Nanci Griffith to Boiled in Lead ramp up the energy level, as does the constant stream of music flowing from room to room through a scattered garden of radio speakers — it's always a live broadcast, originating from a studio mere yards away. Welcome to KUOM, better known as Radio K, 770 on your AM dial. If you're bored with rock radio, it's where you belong.

Since October 1, 1993, Radio K has become by far the biggest and most successful student-run station in town operating on an annual budget of around $500,000. In contrast, Macalester College's WMCN works on a budget of less than $10,000 a year. Fellow noncommercial jocks at KFAI work with $330,000 a year, while many local commercial budgets step well into seven figures. Staffed by 23 paid university employees and more than twice that number of student volunteers, Radio K counts on the university for 20 percent of its funding, with another 20 percent coming from student service fees; federal and state grants make up the rest.

Dollar signs aside, Radio K is about bringing all manner of cool music together on one airwave plate and freshening the feel of rock radio for the university populace, and whoever else wants to tune in. There is, admittedly, a certain indie chic here, a hipness rooted in service to the same family of independent and sometimes obscure artists and labels that provide industry-bucking ammo for music snobs from coast to coast. At the same time, there's nothing at all snobbish about uniting fertile rock genres — guitar pop, hip-hop, lounge retro, punk/thrash and techno among them — and enhancing the blend with an honest, localized perspective.

Local "Governor of Fun" Dylan Hicks and saxophonist John Devine play the Radio K studio.

By all accounts, Radio K is thriving now as much as ever, broadcasting seven days a week on a wide AM signal and FM cable — only cable after dark. In a city whose alternative radio market has been forcefully invaded by a pair of slick, decidedly commercial corporate arms — KEGE (The Edge) and KREV/WREV (The REV) — Radio K has turned a deft, deceptively simple vision of radio into a profoundly refreshing format that wins high marks from its immediate target audience as well as from members of the local music community.

"We're a bunch of radio geeks," says music director Dan Sigelman. He's in the middle of an on-air set, slouched behind the control board in jeans and a Noise Addict T-shirt, sliding from a mellowed-out Pink Floyd dusty to new stuff from Guided By Voices. When asked to define the station's format, an impressive and eclectic gathering of styles, vintages and origins, he gets stuck: "I don't know ... whatever's good."

To virgin ears, the Radio K experience can be disorienting. Any given hour-long dosage is likely to contain a good measure of indie rock, a pinch of punk and funk, one or more world beat or international tracks, a good ska tune, a new local release and perhaps something from James Brown's earliest to round out the mix. It's hard to predict, really. Despite the fact that the station employs a weekly playlist, DJs are free to take spontaneous turns that reflect a variety of musical tastes. "We're a really different college radio station, because about 80 percent of what you hear is programmed," Sigelman says. "At most college stations a guy on the air. "It's a constant process trying to make the DJs better," he says. "I do cut them some slack. I don't want them to be overprofessional showman-type DJs. ... But a lot of these people are building a résumé, so they aren't going to be screwing around."

"I think Radio K is great — I completely support them," says Kevin Cole, program director at REV 105 and a former KUOM DJ. "[At the REV], I wanted to hire people that were really passionate about music, and so I've hired several folks from Radio K." Among key REV staffers who are K alumni are Thorn, Steve Nelson, Joanne Hepburn and morning-show host Brian Oake.

"For college radio, I felt like it was an ideal situation," Oake says. "The freedom we had was pretty exciting — to be able to play Ministry on a morning show, that was great. I'd never been deeply steeped in the intricacies of radio, and [Radio K] was a great training ground."

"Personally, I'd like to see us get more political," says Paul Harding, host of Sunday morning's "Radio K International." "But as we're on noncommercial status, there's quite a limit on what we can do." Under FCC guidelines, non-commercial public stations are forbidden from making any direct "call to action." While Radio K has an active news department with a daily morning broadcast and regular brief updates, the station seems far more bent on professing musical taste than politics.

If the station's funding is slashed, however, it'll be thanks to the impact of politics on the supposedly insulated Corporation for Public Broadcasting, which is about as popular with Republicans in Congress as FBI agents are with Montana's Freemen. With CPB providing 20 to 30 percent of Radio K's current budget,

At home in the U of M's alternative-rock world, Volunteer Coordinator John Sommer kicks back.

Helget is concerned: "We're facing the grim reality of a future without CPB funding, and we have to look at other avenues. We don't want to have to ask listeners for money, especially when we're aiming ourselves toward a college-aged audience who don't often have a lot of disposable income. But if it means keeping the station in existence, like it or not, we're gonna have to."

Though it may not be in the form of legal tender, Radio K has garnered steady support from figures on the local music scene. "They're just doing what people in radio are supposed to be doing," says Pat Dwyer, distribution man for locally based Amphetamine Reptile Records. "We need to have people who care about music on the air. Radio K is almost the last redeeming moment in radio, if there's going to be one."

Christian Rangel, frontman for Colfax Abbey and a veteran of "Off the Record," admits to being a fan: "They've got a great listenership. This is a perfect city for a station like that. I like the REV and everything, but I really dig what Radio K does."

"They do an awesome job," Cole says, "but it's a hard job, as well. I almost feel like they're our sister station ... The REV offers more consistency, a more professional approach," he adds says Cole, "and it's in FM stereo. Being a college station, Radio K has a lot of different goals. You never know what you're gonna get."

As a founding father of sorts, Musil poses occasionally as a realist: "I've always thought that people really believe in what we're doing. In theory we're the coolest station in town, but in practice it's just easier to listen to the Edge or the REV, either because of the [Radio K's] AM signal, or because sometimes our music makes really abrupt changes that you're not used to. Even for the most die-hard indie-rock fan, it can get old after a while, and you'll just want to hum along with a song you know."

As for Radio K's technical limitations, blame it on poor judgment by U of M bigwigs at mid-century. When nighttime broadcasting became available to the station, university spenders elected to pass. Twenty years later, when FM took off, the station's higher-ups were convinced it was only a fad. That the U had the foresight to give Radio K a shot in 1993, all things considered, is a small miracle.

"I hope we haven't let go of the fact that it's fun," Simon Peter says intently. "Music is fundamentally fun. I listen to alternative radio, and I hear all these riffs where everyone's taking themselves way too seriously. All the singers seem to be moaning right now. That's the problem with current alternative music is that it's not fun. One of the ways we choose the music we play is if we put it on and it makes us grin stupidly — if we got that kind of response from a really silly hook, then that's good."

While the rampant repetition and utter predictability of corporate alternative radio lurches on, Radio K promises stupid grins and pleasant surprises day after day to those willing to brave the great divide between FM and AM. To actually volunteer at the station requires that one be a registered student at the University of Minnesota, which is why some DJs are in no rush to grab their sheepskin. A number of staff members confess to delaying their coursework or taking post-graduate extension classes just to retain the right to stay on the air at what just may be the best rock station in town, or at least, a more plausible step toward radio revolution.

"At any radio station, you always have the people who love radio and the people who love music," Musil explains. "What I've always tried to do is to get those two people to cooperate — it seems pretty obvious here. I get all the music I need from Radio K." ♦

Help kick off Earth Week by doing something wild!

April 13 rally and doorhanging to protect the Boundary Waters Canoe Area Wilderness (BWCAW) and Voyageurs National Park (VNP).

Mears Park, Saint Paul, 10:00 a.m. Music by Arise and Stagger. Inspiration by Rep. Bruce Vento, Rep. Bill Luther, and members of the Minnesota Wilderness and Parks Coalition.

Shoe leather by you.

Our National Parks and wilderness areas are under attack. From Alaska to Minnesota's interlaced wilderness waterways, selfish special interests are trying to undo a century of public lands protection. Here in Minnesota they want to open up our national park and wilderness areas to ever increasing levels of motorized use. Help us stop them.

This message is part of a special education project in which thousands of doorhangers will be delivered by citizens like yourself to neighborhoods throughout the Twin Cities. Please come to the rally April 13, and help us distribute the doorhangers to our fellow citizens. Our wild places need us, now more than ever.

Help protect Minnesota's wild places. For our families. For our future.

Paid for by the Sierra Club.

WIN-CITIES Reader cheapo discs & GRAMERCY

INVITE YOU TO ENTER THE MYSTERY SCIENCE THEATER 3000 - THE MOVIE CONTEST

Come up with a wacky photo caption from the movie scene below, and drop it off at CHEAPO DISCS in Uptown. Located at 2919 Hennepin Ave. First 70 people will receive a special screening pass for two to the movie. One per person while they last.

THE 5 BEST CAPTIONS WILL BE INVITED FOR LUNCH WITH THE MST3K: THE MOVIE— TEAM AT PLANET HOLLYWOOD ON FRIDAY, APRIL 19.

Screening Date: THURSDAY, APRIL 18.

Dress as your favorite MST3K character opening night, April 19, Uptown Theatre and get an autographed poster (while they last).

NAME: _____

PHONE #: _____

GRAMERCY PICTURES PRESENTS A BEST BRAINS PRODUCTION "MYSTERY SCIENCE THEATER 3000: THE MOVIE" MICHAEL J. NELSON TRACE BEAULIEU KEVIN LAURPHY JIM CALLEON
 BILLY BARBER TONI MADRAS JEFF PASTYHARD BILLY JOHNSON JEFF STOPKOROS MICHAEL J. NELSON TRACE BEAULIEU JIM CALLEON
 KEVIN LAURPHY PAUL JO PENN PAUL CHAPLIN BRIDGET JONES JIM HODGSON JIM CALLEON

BLAST OFF@www.mst3000.com

APRIL 10-16, 1996

TWIN CITIES

Reader

BOWLED OVER

Enigma meets tadpoles in Mimbres pottery

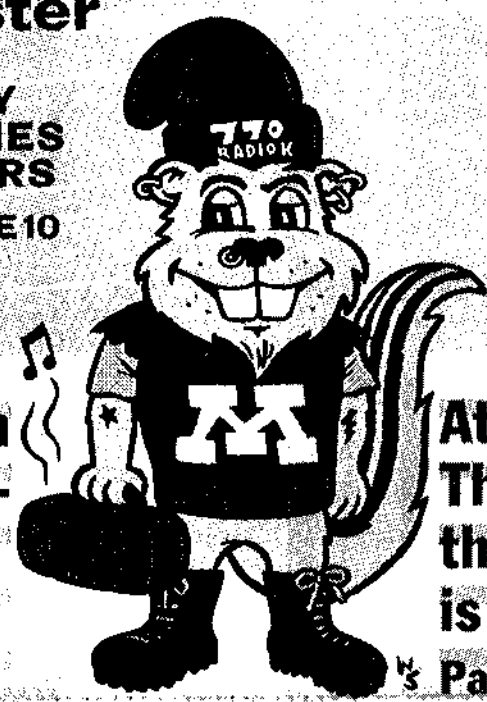

Page 15

SHOWS

SPECIAL K

How a daytime-only AM station made Goldy Gopher a radio hipster

BY JAMES DIERS
PAGE 10

Big Brother keeps watch over cities' youth

Page 5

It's My Party: Coleman woos "irrelevant" DFL

Page 7

Great northern railroad? Land-use meeting leaves crater

Page 8

At Bald Alice Theatre, the Shepard is my lord

Page 18

WARD SUTTON

WARD SUTTON

Special K

For two-and-a-half years, U of M students have used AM airwaves to spark their own radio revolution

BY JAMES DIERS
PHOTOS BY CRAIG BARES

Rarig Center, on the West Bank in Minneapolis, is typical of the University of Minnesota's grim modern architecture. A gray, monolithic mass of concrete and brick, the building looks more like a correctional facility than a home to some of the university's more creative organizations. A cast of eager, artsy-looking students shuffling about this gloomy fortress is the only real signs that life here is anything beyond, well, institutional. Maybe it's to be expected at a school visited all too frequently by the quandaries of underfunded education.

Make your way up to the fifth and sixth floors, and the world seems brighter. Up here, the cold rock walls are plastered with rock posters. Names and images ranging from Quicksand to Nanci Griffith to Boiled in Lead ramp up the energy level, as does the constant stream of music flowing from room to room through a scattered garden of radio speakers — it's always a live broadcast, originating from a studio mere yards away. Welcome to KUOM, better known as Radio K, 770 on your AM dial. If you're bored with rock radio, it's where you belong.

Since October 1, 1993, Radio K has become by far the biggest and most successful student-run station in town operating on an annual budget of around $500,000. In contrast, Macalester College's WMCN works on a budget of less than $10,000 a year. Fellow noncommercial jocks at KFAI work with $330,000 a year, while many local commercial budgets step well into seven figures. Staffed by 23 paid university employees and more than twice that number of student volunteers, Radio K counts on the university for 20 percent of its funding, with another 20 percent coming from student service fees; federal and state grants make up the rest.

Dollar signs aside, Radio K is about bringing all manner of cool music together on one airwave plate and freshening the feel of rock radio for the university populace, and whoever else wants to tune in. There is, admittedly, a certain indie chic here, a hipness rooted in service to the same family of independent and sometimes obscure artists and labels that provide industry-bucking ammo for music snobs from coast to coast. At the same time, there's nothing at all snobbish about uniting fertile rock genres — guitar pop, hip-hop, lounge retro, punk/thrash and techno among them — and enhancing the blend with an honest, localized perspective.

Local "Governor of Fun" Dylan Hicks and saxophonist John Devine play the Radio K studio.

By all accounts, Radio K is thriving now as much as ever, broadcasting seven days a week on a wide AM signal and FM cable — only cable after dark. In a city whose alternative radio market has been forcefully invaded by a pair of slick, decidedly commercial corporate arms — KJGE (The Edge) and KREV/WREV (The REV) — Radio K has turned a deft, deceptively simple vision of radio into a profoundly refreshing format that wins high marks from its immediate target audience as well as from members of the local music community.

"We're a bunch of radio geeks," says music director Dan Sigelman. He's in the middle of an on-air set, slouched behind the control board in jeans and a Noise Addict T-shirt, sliding from a mellowed-out Pink Floyd dusty to new stuff from Guided By Voices. When asked to define the station's format, an impressive and eclectic gathering of styles, vintages and origins, he gets stuck: "I don't know ... whatever's good."

To virgin ears, the Radio K experience can be disorienting. Any given hour-long dosage is likely to contain a good measure of indie rock, a pinch of punk and funk, one or more world beat or international tracks, a good ska tune, a new local release and perhaps something from James Brown's earliest to round out the mix. It's hard to predict, really. Despite the fact that the station employs a weekly playlist, DJs are free to take spontaneous turns that reflect a variety of musical tastes. "We're a really different college radio station, because about 80 percent of what you hear is programmed," Sigelman says. "At most college stations a guy on the air. "It's a constant process trying to make the DJs better," he says. "I do cut them some slack. I don't want them to be overprofessional showman-type DJs. . . . But a lot of these people are building a résumé, so they aren't going to be screwing around."

"I think Radio K is great . . . I completely support them," says Kevin Cole, program director at REV 105 and a former KUOM DJ. "[At the REV], I wanted to hire people that were really passionate about music, and so I've hired several folks from Radio K." Among key REV staffers who are K alumni are Thorn, Steve Nelson, Joanne Hepburn and morning-show host Brian Oake.

"For college radio, I felt like it was an ideal situation," Oake says. "The freedom we had was pretty exciting — to be able to play Ministry on a morning show, that was great. I'd never been deeply steeped in the intricacies of radio, and [Radio K] was a great training ground."

"Personally, I'd like to see us get more political," says Paul Harding, host of Sunday morning's "Radio K International." "But as we're on noncommercial status, there's quite a limit on what we can do." Under FCC guidelines, non-commercial public stations are forbidden from making any direct "call to action." While Radio K has an active news department with a daily morning broadcast and regular brief updates, the station seems far more bent on professing musical taste than politics.

If the station's funding is slashed, however, it'll be thanks to the impact of politics on the supposedly insulated Corporation for Public Broadcasting, which is about as popular with Republicans in Congress as FBI agents are with Montana's Freemen. With CPB providing 20 to 30 percent of Radio K's current budget,

At home in the U of M's alternative-rock world, Volunteer Coordinator John Sommer kicks back.

Helget is concerned: "We're facing the grim reality of a future without CPB funding, and we have to look at other avenues. We don't want to have to ask listeners for money, especially when we're aiming ourselves toward a college-aged audience who don't often have a lot of disposable income. But if it means keeping the station in existence, like it or not, we're gonna have to."

Though it may not be in the form of legal tender, Radio K has garnered steady support from figures on the local music scene. "They're just doing what people in radio are supposed to be doing," says Pat Dwyer, distribution man for locally based Amphetamine Reptile Records. "We need to have people who care about music on the air. Radio K is almost the last redeeming moment in radio, if there's going to be one."

Christian Rangel, frontman for Colfax Abbey and a veteran of "Off the Record," admits to being a fan: "They've got a great listenership. This is a perfect city for a station like that. I like the REV and everything, but I really dig what Radio K does."

"They do an awesome job," Cole says, "but it's a hard job, as well. I almost feel like they're our sister station . . . The REV offers more consistency, a more professional approach," he adds says Cole, "and it's in FM stereo. Being a college station, Radio K has a lot of different goals. You never know what you're gonna get."

As a founding father of sorts, Musil poses occasionally as a realist: "I've always thought that people really believe in what we're doing. In theory we're the coolest station in town, but in practice it's just easier to listen to the Edge or the REV, either because of the [Radio K's] AM signal, or because sometimes our music makes really abrupt changes that you're not used to. Even for the most die-hard indie-rock fan, it can get old after a while, and you'll just want to hum along with a song you know."

As for Radio K's technical limitations, blame it on poor judgment by U of M bigwigs at mid-century. When nighttime broadcasting became available to the station, university spenders elected to pass. Twenty years later, when FM took off, the station's higher-ups were convinced it was only a fad. That the U had the foresight to give Radio K a shot in 1993, all things considered, is a small miracle.

"I hope we haven't let go of the fact that it's fun," Simon Peter says intently. "Music is fundamentally fun. I listen to alternative radio, and I hear all these riffs where everyone's taking themselves way too seriously. All the singers seem to be moaning right now. That's the problem with current alternative music is that it's not fun. One of the ways we choose the music we play is if we put it on and it makes us grin stupidly — if we got that kind of response from a really silly hook, then that's good."

While the rampant repetition and utter predictability of corporate alternative radio lurches on, Radio K promises stupid grins and pleasant surprises day after day to those willing to brave the great divide between FM and AM. To actually volunteer at the station requires that one be a registered student at the University of Minnesota, which is why some DJs are in no rush to grab their sheepskin. A number of staff members confess to delaying their coursework or taking post-graduate extension classes just to retain the right to stay on the air at what just may be the best rock station in town, or at least, a more plausible step toward radio revolution.

"At any radio station, you always have the people who love radio and the people who love music," Musil explains. "What I've always tried to do is to get those two people to cooperate — it seems pretty obvious here. I get all the music I need from Radio K." ♦

Help kick off Earth Week by doing something wild!

April 13 rally and doorhanging to protect the Boundary Waters Canoe Area Wilderness (BWCAW) and Voyageurs National Park (VNP).

Mears Park, Saint Paul, 10:00 a.m. Music by Arise and Stagger. Inspiration by Rep. Bruce Vento, Rep. Bill Luther, and members of the Minnesota Wilderness and Parks Coalition.

Shoe leather by you.

Our National Parks and wilderness areas are under attack. From Alaska to Minnesota's interlaced wilderness waterways, selfish special interests are trying to undo a century of public lands protection. Here in Minnesota they want to open up our national park and wilderness areas to ever increasing levels of motorized use. Help us stop them.

This message is part of a special education project in which thousands of doorhangers will be delivered by citizens like yourself to neighborhoods throughout the Twin Cities. Please come to the rally April 13, and help us distribute the doorhangers to our fellow citizens. Our wild places need us, now more than ever.

Help protect Minnesota's wild places. For our families. For our future.

Paid for by the Sierra Club.

Photo by Mike Schreyer

INVITE YOU TO ENTER THE MYSTERY SCIENCE THEATER 3000 - THE MOVIE CONTEST

Come up with a wacky photo caption from the movie scene below, and drop it off at CHEAPO DISCS in Uptown. Located at 2919 Hennepin Ave. First 70 people will receive a special screening pass for two to the movie. One per person while they last.

THE 5 BEST CAPTIONS WILL BE INVITED FOR LUNCH WITH THE MST3K: THE MOVIE—TEAM AT PLANET HOLLYWOOD ON FRIDAY, APRIL 19.

Screening Date: THURSDAY, APRIL 18.

Dress as your favorite MST3K character opening night, April 19, Uptown Theatre and get an autographed poster (while they last).

NAME: _____

PHONE #: _____

EVERY YEAR HOLLYWOOD MAKES HUNDREDS OF MOVIES. THIS IS ONE OF THEM!

GRAMERCY PICTURES PRESENTS A BEST BRAINS PRODUCTION "MYSTERY SCIENCE THEATER 3000: THE MOVIE" MICHAEL J. NELSON TRACY BEATSON HEYVON JONES JEFF KATTELIN

BETTY BARBER JEFF HUNTER JEFF KATTELIN BILL JOHNSON JEFF STOKERHOUSE RUSSELL J. NELSON TRACE GRADY JOAN MARLON

KEVIN HAZARDY TONY JOYCE PAUL CHAPLIN BROOK JONES JILL HODGSON JEFF KATTELIN

BLAST OFF @ www.mst3000.com